Summary of findings

Overall summary

Allingham House Care Centre provides accommodation, nursing and personal care for up to 86 adults living with mental health problems or dementia.

We found the following examples of good practice.

The provider had allocated a wing of the home's nursing unit as a designated care unit for up to seven people with Covid-19. The unit was located on the first floor and had direct access from the outside with a separate entrance, lift and staircase.

People admitted to the unit remained there until they were symptom free or well. People who then needed to move to another unit in the care home had to self-isolate again for 14 days.

Staff had access to a changing facility and staff room on the designated unit. Staff changed into their uniforms on arrival and changed out of these when they left. The provider had given staff laundry bags to carry their uniforms in, which could be placed straight into a washing machine.

The provider included agency staff in their weekly testing programme for staff.

The designated care unit had its own store of supplies such as personal protective equipment (PPE), cleaning materials, linen, medicines and clinical items to prevent the need for staff to enter other areas of the care home.

We were assured that this service met good infection prevention and control guidelines as a designated care setting.
